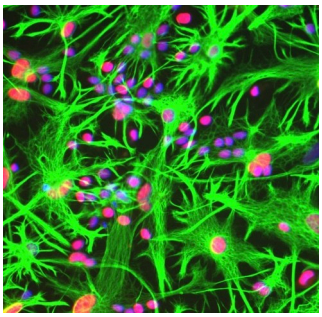
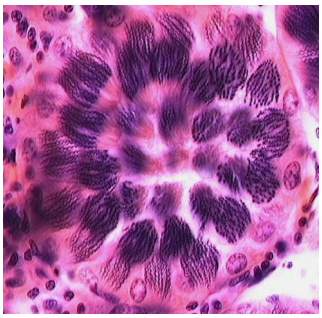
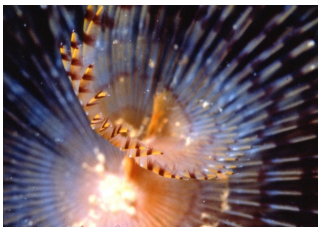
Uday Kishore

Brunel University, London



From Bacteria to Human: The Journey of a lifetime





Dr. Uday Kishore is a teacher and scientist researching in immunology. After his PhD from University of Delhi, India, he spent a year at the Salk Institute, San Diego, California with a NASA Fellow. His post-doctoral training and senior fellowship took place at the University of Oxford, first at the MRC Immunochemistry Unit, and then Weatherall Institute of Molecular Medicine, John Radcliffe Hospital. In addition to being the founder director of the Centre for Infection, Immunity and Disease mechanisms at Brunel University London, Dr Kishore has been the recipient of MRC Investigator award, European Commission Young Scientist award, Mother Teresa Excellence award, Global Achiever Award and Pride of India award. He holds adjunct and professorial positions at several universities, research institutions and teaching hospitals worldwide. In this lecture, he will share his wealth of experience and insight how he has lived the life of a career scientist for last 25 years, with enthusiasm and excitement.
